Simple Presente Tense

The "present simple" is used:

To express habits and routines, general facts, repeated actions or situations, emotions and permanent desires:
I smoke (habit); work in London (permanence); London is a big city (general fact)

To give instructions or directions:

Walk two hundred meters, then turn left

To talk about scheduled, present or future events:

Your exam starts at 09.00.

To refer to the future, behind some conjunctions: after, when, before, as soon as, until:

I'll give it to you when you come next Saturday.

Adverbs of Frequency

They are the ones we use to express or describe how often we perform an action. There are 6 main adverbs of frequency used in English: always, usually (or normally), often, sometimes, rarely and never. Each of them has a similar meaning:

Always: always.

Usually: usually.

Normally: normally.

Often: followed or often.

Sometimes: some times.

Rarely: rarely, rarely or rarely.

Never: never.

Place

Let's see how they work and which are the best known:
English prepositions of place
We call prepositions of place those expressions that determine the position of an object or person.
Most of the time, these prepositions are placed right after the main verb or action of the sentence:

Let's see how they work and which are the best known:
In
in, within
We use it when the object or subject is in a three-dimensional space, in a country or city, or when it is doing something in a place:

Presente Continuos

The present continuous generally refers to situations or actions that are being carried out at the moment and, as in Spanish, learning this tense is essential to have fluency and expression in any conversation in English. Learn in this article the correct way to use the present continuous and its structure with very simple examples of the present continuous..

Object Pronouns

Object pronouns or object pronouns are a class of words used to replace an object that has already been mentioned or is known to the interlocutor. These words serve to avoid repetitions and speed up the speech. Look at the following sentences: The book is on the table. (The book is on the table.) Give me the book, please (Give me the book, please.) → Give it to me, please. (Give it to me, please.) If we ask our interlocutor to give us a book that we have already pointed to or mentioned before, we can use a direct object pronoun (he, in this case) so that we do not have to mention the book twice and avoid being repetitive.
